

St ALBANS & HARPENDEN Review

FROM a rock band to the rockery, a St Albans-based landscape gardener is delighted his firm has been named Britain’s best company in the Federation of Small Businesses’ annual awards.

James Lanwarne gave up his rock career in 2002 after his band was dropped by its label.

Keen to follow his second passion, Lanwarne Landscapes Ltd was established a year later and it has now beaten hundreds of entrants to win the FSB’s Small Business of the Year and Micro Business of Year awards.

James said: “To win big at such a high profile ceremony and to beat such an impressive line-up of companies for the overall award win is quite overwhelming.

“The company has grown significantly due to the unrivalled passion from the team.

“We are all hugely dedicated to delivering exceptional customer service and quality workmanship, which is why so many commissions come from recommendations and repeat business.

“These award wins are ultimately a huge testament to the team and we’re absolutely thrilled to have won.”

James and Tanya Lanwarne toast their success.
